32nd Sunday in Ordinary Time – 10th November 2013

A QUESTION OF FAITH

It seems to me that today's passage has less to do with the story of the seven brothers and more to do with our understanding of resurrection. A clear divide existed then, as it does today, between those who believe in life beyond the grave and those who don't. Even for those who believe, there can be a varying understanding of what form it will take. Will it be life as we know it now or a totally different existence?

This is something I've wondered about, not least since my parents died. Like all my family, and indeed the families of all who have died where there is a belief in resurrection, Heaven and a "new day", I hope to one day see my parents again. That said, I have wondered what it will be like. My mother, in particular, had a number of difficult years before her death, with her mobility and alertness of mind profoundly affected. If I am to see her again, is that the woman I see? I'd prefer to think of her in the full flush of youth, energy, love and fullness of life that her earlier years must have afforded her. Truth told, I didn't really know her then. She was always my mother – older and wiser than me – and I'm not sure what version of her the afterlife might present. The one freshest in my mind is the mother I knew nearing her end, the mother I attended on the day she died but that's not the image I want to hold on to. Likewise my father, and many who have died, changed over the years and age had its way with their looks, health and energy. What version of them does the "resurrection of the body" present?

It's a real question. At the end of the day, like much of the journey we walk in this life, the answer is beyond us. We rely, and continually so, on faith.
