FOURTH SUNDAY OF LENT

IT'S NOT JUST (TRÓCAIRE LENT 2021)

It is right and just.

We use this line in response to the celebrant's call to prayer as we enter the preface and the Liturgy of The Eucharist. "Let us give thanks to the Lord our God", he says, and the response finds its voice; "It is right and just."

Right is the opposite to wrong and just the opposite to unjust. Clearly in using both, we are veering towards the appropriate way to live life and make a difference.

Trócaire used as part of an advertising campaign, the slogan "It's not just" and, like most slogans there is a depth to it that asks us think, as some like to call it, "outside the box" – maybe we might look at one of the Trócaire messages today:

"Sarah looks at her dry, barren land and asks where her son's next meal is coming from. Sami clutches his favourite teddy as he looks at the rubble of what was once his home. Mya sees the boys in her village go to school and wonders why her daughter can't receive an education too."

There are images with these lines, images all too familiar to us, of people living in poverty, looking at scorched and unyielding land – a powerful and striking image of a little boy holding a teddy bear that has seen better days but remains his companion and another of a child clinging to a school book but no school to bring it to.

"It's not just" the campaign tells us "that the rains don't come, that Sami's home (the little boy with the teddy bear) was destroyed or that the little girl is denied an education just because she is a girl." – it's not just.

Someone shared this with me during the week. I don't think there was any hidden message!! I liked it and was reminded of my father who used to quote a neighbour of ours (that was gone before my time) My father would say: "As Grady Wynne would say: 'It's all right in talking but no harm to say nothing'" It is good to reflect on when we say things and why. Someone said that before we say anything that might hurt we should ask ourselves: "Is it kind? Is it true? Is it helpful? Is it necessary?"
